

The collaboration on the e-Schooling project aims to study how new educational technologies are used within the school and how the users (teachers and students) interact with them.

The study is based on experimental sessions, where the developed prototype systems are tested and assessed according to specific parameters. The data collected during the experimental phase are analyzed and a possible model of educational technologies usage is derived from the data.